Dear Educators and Administrators,

My name is Dr. Jackie Marquette and I am writing you because we have something in common, professionals who serve students/individuals, 14 and over with ADHD, ASD, at risk, or other related disabilities.

Many students struggle integrating with peers or entering work settings because of low self worth, high anxiety, or depression. With limitations and comparisons to peers, many are jolted into fear of leaving their home.

Yet, each one has unique strengths and remarkable abilities that can be further developed.

A new tool, The Marquette Strengths and Career Index, (MSCI©), was designed to support emotional adaptation to community settings and employment. MSCI© can better serve students to see who they are and feel their value, which is especially necessary during these uncertain and tumultuous times.

The MSCI© offers the individual a printout list of options for jobs, careers, and college studies which matches the student's strengths. The software contains hundreds of work/career possibilities. The four areas of strengths: hard skills, self-expression, personal preferences, and self-emotional awareness.

With the new SafetyWorks© Model as a map containing the MSCI©, a new fresh start can emerge guiding youth through emotional adaptation, their interests, and work/vocational goals.

I have been an educator and researcher in special education and career education for three decades. My experiences, both professionally (teaching and research) and personally (having an adult son with autism) gave me insight to create the MSCI© and the SafetyWorks© Model.

Professional and student testimonials claim it is valuable to students in transition to accessing and maintaining work. Special Educators found the MSCI eliminates the guess work of jobs/career, builds curiosity, and promotes student motivation in career exploration.

I am interested in discussing with you how the MSCI with SafetyWorks© can better serve individuals who struggle emotionally and socially. You can reach me on my cell or via email. I hope to talk with you soon.

Sincerely,

Dr. Jackie Marquette
